Teachers are in schools #readytoteach

Teachers and administrators are in classrooms today, ready to provide a safe learning environment for their students, as they always have.

“Parents, teachers and students are frustrated that the McNeil government has locked out students,” says Liette Doucet, NSTU President. “It’s unfortunate the government has taken this action, which has placed a tremendous burden on families.”

“Teachers want government to make needed investments to improve classroom conditions, that’s why they are taking this stand. During work-to-rule, teachers will continue to go to work, prepared to do what’s best for children,” she added.

Contrary to an announcement made by Liberal House Leader Michel Samson today, there have been no talks between NSTU and the government. The last talks broke off over a week ago.
